Timer Function on the Anova Precision Cooker

Actually a couple of timer questions. It appears that after the cooker has reached temperature, to activate the timer you need to:

1. Hold the "play" button down for 8 seconds. During that time the display will change from C to F.
2. Hold the (newly lit) timer button down for 3 seconds.
3. Use the scroll wheel to set the time.
4. Press the "timer" button to start the countdown
5. Hold the "play" button for 3 seconds to get it so switch back to C

Do you have to actually do this every single time you want to start a timer or just the first time to get the "timer" button to appear?

Also, does the unit turn off when the timer expires or does it just beep (or both)?

-Thx!

Unfortunately, the Anova design also suffers from extreme simplicity that ends up being form over function: to minimize controls, the timer function (which is essential for sous vide) is a mysterious sequence of arbitrary short and long button presses.

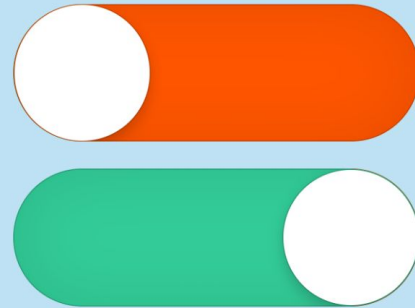

Thankfully, this has been fixed in recent models.

Can we simplify this while preserving the same amount of information?
